UGANDA MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE

POSTGRADUATE DIPLOMA IN DIPLOMACY & INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS (DDIR)

EVENING: KAMPALA

START DATE: JULY/25

PROGRAMME RATIONALE

The international system is fraught with profound challenges because there's no world Government to constrain and control the behavior and actions of various players, especially nations/states. Actors pursue competing, at times, conflicting interests at the expense of other actors in the system, which creates misunderstandings and conflicts between and among themselves. To address that, it requires a well-prepared caliber of experts who understand the dynamics at play in systems so that they can navigate through complex situations to promote or secure better positions for their nation, state or organization. Thus, DDIR seeks to equip participants with skills to address leadership, administration and management challenges at a global, continental, regional and local level to secure outcomes that will put their countries and organizations in better positions, i.e., promote and defend their national and organizational interests.

TARGET GROUP

The programme is designed for practitioners, academics, government entities such as the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of East African Community Affairs as well as agencies dealing in related matters. In particular the programme targets international organizations (e.g., U.N., UNDP), inter Governmental, international and non-Governmental organizations, regional organizations, international consultants and think-tanks, Embassy officials, and professionals working in foreign missions and departmental heads with foreign experts and diplomats. ## BACKGROUND

UMI was established in 1969 as an Institute of Public Administration (IPA) and as an Agency of the Ministry of Public Service responsible for providing in-service training to public servants in Uganda. The enactment of the UMI Statute in 1992 transformed IPA into UMI and granted it a semi-autonomous status to develop its own courses and award its own Certificates and Diplomas.

The Institute remained under the Ministry of Public Service until 2001. The enactment of the 2001 Universities and Other Tertiary Institutions Act (UOTIA) repealed the UMI Statute of 1992 and placed the Institute under the Ministry of Education and Sports (MoES). Later the 2001 Act was amended in 2006 and classified UMI as “Other Degree Awarding Institutions”. As such UMI as a Management Development Institute (MDI) is mandated to award Degrees without necessarily becoming a University.

OUR BUSINESS

As a Management Development Institute (MDI), Uganda Management Institute (UMI) has been able to transmit generalised managerial experiences to practicing managers in the public, private and civil society organisations. UMI’s peculiarity that has stood the test of time is embedded in its diversity to award Higher Degrees, Postgraduate Diplomas, tailor-made executive and professional courses. This has not only transformed organisations but has given our Alumni a competitive edge nationally and internationally.

ALEMIGA JIMMY studied “Intangible Resources and Sustainable Competitive Advantage in Post-First-Generation Indigenous Family-Owned Businesses in Kampala Capital City Authority, Uganda.” Despite the recognized importance of intangible resources in sustaining competitive advantage in family-owned firms, their role in generational sustainable competitive advantage (SCA) remains poorly understood. Prior studies indicate that intangible resources (IRs) in family businesses remain underexplored, revealing knowledge gaps that limit conceptual clarity and create empirical gaps regarding their contribution to SCA. Mainstream management research has often overlooked family business contexts, ignoring the unique, embedded, and intergenerational nature of social, human, and organizational capital. Unlike previous studies that combined dynamic capability theory with the resources-based view (RBV), this research relied solely on RBV as a clear and focused lens. RBV explained sustainable competitive advantage through valuable, rare, inimitable, and non-substitutable (VRIN) resources. It was most appropriate because it enabled a direct examination of how intangible resources (IRs) independently contribute to sustainable competitive advantage (SCA) in post-first-generation indigenous family-owned businesses without added theoretical complexity. The literature review showed that most studies examine IRs separately, so their combined effect and how they work together to create SCA is not fully understood. In addition, family business resources are also underrepresented in mainstream research, leading to fragmented understanding of their role in competitive advantage. This revealed a knowledge gap that limited conceptual clarity and resulted in insufficient empirical evidence on how these factors contributed to sustainable competitive advantage (SCA). The study adopted a pragmatic research philosophy, integrating elements of positivism and interpretivism for a balanced approach. The findings showed that social and organizational capital significantly enhanced SCA, while human capital had a positive but insignificant direct effect. Qualitative results indicated that trust, network ties, relational norms, databases, routines, and organizational culture drove profitability, growth, market share, and customer loyalty. Overall, integrated intangible resources (IRs) underpin competitiveness. Within Kampala Capital City Authority (KCCA), firms should strengthen trust, networks, succession planning, systems, and culture. The study was self-funded and supervised by Associate Professor Paddy Mugambe, and Dr. Isaac Newton Kayongo of Makerere University Business

BEESIGYE ABNER BARYAIA investigated aspects of Decentralization and Quality Public Healthcare Service Delivery in Five Selected Districts in Western Uganda. Following the Pragmatic Philosophical Perspective, the study examined the relationship between the three dimensions of decentralization (Fiscal, Administrative and Political) and the quality of public healthcare service delivery in Buhweju, Bushenyi, Mitooma, Rubirizi, and Sheema districts. A mixed methods approach combined both quantitative and qualitative methods of data collection and analysis through questionnaires and face-to-face interviews. Results revealed a significant positive relationship between all dimensions of decentralisation - fiscal decentralization, Administrative decentralization and Political decentralisation - as having a significant positive relationship with the quality of healthcare delivery. Qualitative findings emphasized health promotion, effective data management, and emergency preparedness as essential elements of improved service delivery. The study concludes that fiscal decentralization substantially enhances healthcare quality, whereas administrative and political dimensions require further strengthening. It recommends improved fund allocation and utilization, recruitment of committed health personnel, adequate medical supplies, and stronger engagement of local political leaders. The proposed Decentralized Healthcare Improvement Framework (DHIF) integrates fiscal capacity, administrative efficiency, political oversight, governance mechanisms, and community participation to promote sustainable improvements in Uganda's public healthcare system. The study was self-funded and was supervised by Prof. Paul Jackson, University of Birmingham, United Kingdom and Dr Edgar Mwesigye Kateshumbwa of Uganda Management Institute.

BWIRE FREDERICK OUMA studied the relationship between self-financing and financial sustainability in non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in Eastern Uganda. Motivated by uncertainty in donor funding, the research investigated whether self-financing strategies, including programme revenue, related spin-offs, asset downtime, and unrelated extensions, contribute to the financial sustainability of NGOs. The study also explored whether financial management practices mediate this relationship. A descriptive correlational research design was employed within a social constructivist framework, integrating both quantitative and qualitative approaches. Data were collected using questionnaires, interviews, and document analysis. The findings showed that Programme revenue had a strong positive correlation. Related spin-offs and asset downtime exhibited weak negative relationships. At the same time, the unrelated extension showed a moderate positive correlation. Financial management practices did not mediate the relationship. However, secondary data revealed that NGOs engaging in self-financing activities were financially resilient. The study recommends that NGOs adopt strategic approaches to self-financing, including aligning income-generating ventures with the mission, institutionalising the productive use of underutilised assets, investing in scalable and sustainable business models, strengthening financial management systems, capacity building and engaging donors to support corporate social entrepreneurship plans for income diversification, which can ensure long-term viability. Theoretically, this study integrates the Resource-Based View, Systems Theory, and Pecking Order Theory to examine how NGOs leverage internal capabilities for financial sustainability. Empirically, it contributes to evidence that self-financing efforts remain underdeveloped and need to be guided by robust governance and management systems.

Practically, it provides insights for NGO managers, donors, and policymakers to strengthen local resource mobilisation and reduce overreliance on external funding. The study contributes to building a body of work and fills a key knowledge gap on the self-financing practices of NGOs. The study was self-funded and supervised by Associate Professor Paul Onyango Delewa of Gulu University and Professor Patricia Nomzamo Joubert of the University of Swaziland.

KALENZI VICTOR conducted a study on “Succession Planning Facets and Continuity of Small and Medium-Sized Family Businesses in Fort Portal Tourism City, Uganda”. The study examined the critical role of succession planning facets/factors in ensuring the sustainability of family-owned enterprises. The study focused on small and medium-sized family businesses (SMFBs) operating in Fort Portal, a key tourism hub in Uganda, where business continuity just as it is in most parts of Uganda, remains a significant challenge due to weak succession planning structures and poor transition process management. The study explored three main dimensions which include Internal succession planning factors (such as ability of the founder, ability of the successor, family culture), External factors (including government policies, market conditions, and customer influence), and the mediating role of the succession process in linking these factors to family business continuity. The study was guided by two theories i.e Family systems theory and Institutional theory. Following a post-positivist research philosophy, the study adopted a concurrent mixed-methods design, integrating both qualitative and quantitative approaches. Data was collected from 26 long-standing family businesses using questionnaires, interviews, and document analysis, and analyzed using statistical tools and thematic techniques. Findings revealed that both internal and external succession planning factors significantly influence the longevity and sustainability of family businesses. Additionally, the study highlighted that an effective succession process enhances smooth leadership transition and strengthens continuity. A key contribution of the research is the development of an “Early Bird Family Business Succession Model,” a tailor-made family business succession model which emphasizes early involvement of successors in business operations. Overall, the study provides valuable insights for policymakers, practitioners, and scholars on improving the handling of succession planning factors and continuity of family businesses in Fort Portal Tourism city and Uganda at large.

The study was self-funded and supervised by Associate Professor Stella Kyohairwe and Associate Professor Sebastian Bigabwenkya of Uganda Management Institute.

MUKOSE GEORGE evaluated the role of Public-Private Partnerships (PPPs) in expanding and improving secondary education provision in Uganda, with particular focus on their implementation under the Universal Secondary Education Programme in Kamuli District. The study addresses a critical policy challenge: how governments can increase access to secondary education in contexts of limited public-sector capacity while ensuring the equity, quality, and relevance of educational outcomes. Using a realist evaluation approach, the research provides a nuanced analysis of how PPP arrangements function within specific institutional contexts. By employing Context-Mechanism-Outcome (CMO) configurations, the study moves beyond conventional outcome-based assessments to explain how and why PPPs produce varied results across different settings. The findings demonstrate that PPPs have played a significant role as a stopgap mechanism in expanding access to secondary education, particularly in underserved areas where public school infrastructure is insufficient. However, the study also identifies key governance and implementation challenges that affect the effectiveness of PPPs. These include inconsistencies in contractual arrangements, inequities in student access, variations in teaching quality, and weaknesses in accountability and monitoring systems. The research highlights the importance of strong institutional frameworks, predictable financing, and effective stakeholder coordination in enhancing PPP performance. A major contribution of the study is the development of a PPP Teacher Deployment and Accountability Model, which provides a practical framework to improve teacher allocation, supervision, and accountability in PPP-supported schools. The model offers policy-relevant insights for strengthening the implementation of PPPs in education. Overall, the thesis makes a significant contribution to the field of education policy by advancing understanding of PPP governance and offering evidence-based recommendations for improving access, equity, quality, and relevance in secondary education systems. The study was sponsored by the East and South African-German Centre of Excellence for Educational Research Methodologies and Management (CERM-ESA), supervised by Professor Gerald Kagambirwe Karyeija and Associate Professor Karim Ssesanga from Uganda Management Institute.

NAMUKASA JANE FRANCES investigated the role of nursing leadership in the promotion of evidence-Based practice (EBP) in referral hospitals in Uganda. This doctoral study employed a cross-sectional mixed-methods design (QUANT-qual), grounded in a pragmatic research philosophy. The study applied transformational and transactional leadership theories; data were collected from 25 referral hospitals in Uganda using questionnaires (hospital nurse leaders), focus group discussions, and stakeholder interviews. Through the integration of quantitative and qualitative approaches, the study provides a comprehensive and contextually relevant understanding of how leadership influences the translation of evidence into clinical practice. The findings indicate that while nurse leaders demonstrate foundational awareness of EBP, significant gaps persist in depth of knowledge and consistency of application. The study establishes that transformational leadership practices, particularly mentorship, supportive supervision, and the promotion of continuous professional development, are positively associated with improved uptake of EBP among nursing staff. Despite this potential, the implementation of EBP is constrained by systemic and organizational barriers, including limited access to current research evidence, high patient workloads, and inadequate institutional support. Nevertheless, key facilitators such as leadership commitment, structured mentorship, and ongoing professional education were identified as critical enablers of progress. A major contribution of this research is the development of a context-specific Nursing leadership EBP model, highlighting the interdependence of leadership capacity, institutional support systems, and individual competencies in advancing evidence-based care. In conclusion, this study underscores the pivotal role of nursing leadership in bridging the gap between knowledge and practice. It recommends the institutionalization of structured leadership development programmes to strengthen EBP competencies and enhance the quality of patient care within Uganda's referral hospitals. The study was supervised by Prof. James L. Nkata, and Associate Professor. Karim Ssesanga, of Uganda Management Institute, Kampala, and funded by St. Francis Hospital Nsambya, UCMB, and State House.

NANSAMBA HADIJAH conducted a study examining institutionalised informal justice systems and their role in mitigating gender-based violence in Bundibugyo District, Uganda. Her research addresses a critical societal challenge, namely the persistence of gender-based violence, particularly in rural communities where access to formal justice systems is often limited. Recognising that many people rely on culturally grounded and community-based mechanisms to resolve disputes, the study explored how these informal justice systems can contribute to more accessible, timely, cost-effective, and responsive approaches to justice. The study adopted a mixed-methods research approach, integrating quantitative and qualitative techniques to provide a comprehensive understanding of the research problem. Data were collected using questionnaires, in-depth interviews, and focus group discussions, allowing for the triangulation of evidence and the inclusion of diverse perspectives from participants. The study examined the functioning of traditional cultural courts, local council courts, and alternative community-based systems, focusing on how communities use them to prevent and respond to gender-based violence. It highlights the importance of these systems in promoting social cohesion, providing accessible avenues for justice, and supporting survivors within their local contexts. The findings reveal that while these community-based justice mechanisms are widely trusted and play a vital role in addressing gender-based violence, they face challenges related to coordination, consistency, and alignment with formal legal standards. At the same time, they offer significant opportunities for strengthening survivor-centred and culturally relevant responses to gender based violence. A key contribution of this study is the development of a practical, context-specific gender-based violence mitigation model to guide the strengthening and integration of informal justice systems into broader governance structures. The model provides a simplified yet comprehensive representation of how gender-based violence can be mitigated through coordinated formal and informal justice mechanisms. It emphasises holistic engagement of all stakeholders and offers a culturally sensitive approach to reducing gender-based violence, with a strong focus on prevention and long-term mitigation rather than mere case management. The study was jointly funded by the candidate, Col. (Rtd) Tom Butime Ateenyi, and Mountains of the Moon University (MMU) and supervised by Associate Professor (Dr.). Stella Kyohairwe and Dr Aida Nyenje Lubwama, both from the Uganda Management Institute, Kampala

NIMUKUNDA WINIFRED KAYIZZI investigated how university governance influences research performance in public universities in Uganda, with particular focus on governance architecture, academic governance practices, and stakeholder participation in decision-making. Previous studies on university governance and research performance have largely emphasized structural or managerial aspects of higher education institutions while paying limited attention to how governance arrangements, academic processes, and stakeholder participation interact to influence research outcomes, particularly in African public universities. This study therefore applied Systems Theory and Structuration Theory to examine how governance structures and human agency interact to shape research performance in Universities. The research was guided by a post-positivist philosophical orientation, which supports the integration of quantitative and qualitative methods to provide a comprehensive understanding of complex institutional phenomena. Accordingly, the study adopted a mixed-methods approach using descriptive and correlational research designs. Data were collected from university administrators, academic staff, and governance stakeholders using questionnaires, interviews, and document analysis covering the period 2012–2022. The findings revealed that governance dimensions jointly explained 15.6% of the variance in research performance, demonstrating that research performance improves when governance systems achieve alignment between strategic oversight, academic governance processes, and inclusive stakeholder participation. The study concluded that weaknesses in governance coherence and role clarity contribute to misalignment within university governance systems. It therefore proposed a governance alignment approach that embeds participatory oversight within institutional governance frameworks to strengthen accountability, coordination, and research performance in public universities in Uganda. The study was privately funded and supervised by Prof. Gerald Kagambirwe Karyeija and Prof. Maria Kaguhangire Barifaijo of Uganda Management Institute.

OKELLO RONALD investigated Board of Governors' outlook and educational performance of Catholic founded government grant-aided secondary schools in Uganda. This doctoral study examined the Boards of Governors' outlook and the educational performance of Catholic-founded Government Grant-Aided Secondary Schools (GASS) in Uganda. It was guided by three objectives: determining the influence of board composition; establishing the influence of board independence; and examining the headteacher's dual role on educational performance. Anchored in Agency, Stakeholder, and Stewardship theories, governance was conceptualized as a tripartite construct. A convergent parallel mixed-methods design drew data from 65 schools through questionnaires, semi-structured interviews, and document analysis of UNEB UCE results (2019–2023), Ministry of Education and Sports' enrolment records, strategic plans, and board minutes. Quantitative data were analysed using descriptive statistics, Pearson's correlation, and regression analysis, while qualitative data underwent thematic content analysis. Board Composition was found to function as a unified construct where professional competence and gender diversity precede statutory representation. However, a persistent "gender ceiling" was identified, with female representation capped at 20–30% and absence of women in chairperson roles. Regarding Board Independence, a "Governance Ceiling" was established: while boards demonstrate procedural autonomy, their substantive objectivity is undermined by financial vulnerabilities, limited training, and institutional pressure to align with the "mind of the bishop." The Headteacher's Dual Role operates as a bifurcated mandate of "Operational Vitality" and "Professional Strain," with a negative correlation ( $r = -0.211$ ). Principal Component Analysis identified four latent performance pillars explaining 74.8% of variance. The Mediated Governance Theory posits governance outcomes as mediated results of executive-secretarial tensions. Three recommendations are advanced: Professional Board Clerk, Communication Health Audits, and capacity-building frameworks. Comparative research is recommended. The study was supervised by Professor Maria V. Kaguhangire-Barifaijo and Associate Professor N.A. Karim Ssesanga of Uganda Management Institute

SANDE PROTAZIO explored the Role of Board Governance in the Organisational Performance of Public Agencies within Uganda's Ministry of Finance, Planning and Economic Development. His study interrogated a critical paradox in public sector governance: the persistent disconnect between governance as designed and governance in practice. While formal frameworks prescribe accountability, transparency, and strategic oversight, their enactment within public agencies is often shaped by political influence, patronage dynamics, and institutional constraints, thereby conditioning how governance outcomes are realised. Anchored in Stakeholder Theory, Public Value Theory, and Upper Echelons Theory, the study adopted an interpretivist orientation and a qualitative multiple-case design. The research drew on evidence from six purposively selected public agencies. It engaged thirty-one participants, including Board members, Chief Executives, and key external stakeholders, to generate contextually grounded insights into governance practice. Findings revealed that board governance influences organisational performance through the dynamic interplay of structural, behavioural, and processual dimensions. However, its effectiveness is uneven and contingent upon appointment integrity, behavioural discipline, procedural rigour, and the broader political-administrative context. The study further established that the prevailing board evaluation practices are largely compliance-oriented, limiting their effectiveness as accountability mechanisms, and therefore advocates for independent board evaluation to strengthen oversight and performance outcomes. A major contribution of this work is the Patronage-Governance-Performance framework, advanced as an emergent analytical lens and as a potential offshoot for further scholarly scrutiny. The study also recommends institutionalising merit-based board appointments anchored on minimum governance certification as a precondition for selection, alongside strengthening governance processes and stakeholder-facing accountability to bridge the gap between governance design and governance practice. The study was self-sponsored and supervised by Professor Gerald Kagambirwe Karyeija and Associate Professor Sebastian Bigabwenkya, both of Uganda Management Institute.

WABWIRE JULIUS ODUKE examined the mechanisms through which inclusion in Universal Primary Education (UPE) influences educational outcomes for children with learning disabilities in Uganda. The study examined how school climate conditions and teachers' inclusive self-efficacy interact to produce meaningful learning outcomes within low-resource contexts. The study was underpinned by a critical realistic stance which adopted a cross sectional research design. A concurrent mixed-methods fuzzy-set Qualitative Comparative Analysis (fsQCA) approach was used to test combinations of conditions (variables) influencing educational outcomes. This enabled both contextual understanding and empirical validation. Data were collected from pupils, teachers, headteachers, including school management committee leaders, and education officials at district and MoES. Qualitative findings highlighted key drivers such as supportive leadership, collaborative teaching, adaptive pedagogy, and positive school climate. Quantitative results showed that no single factor alone produces outcomes; rather, a combinations of inclusive school climate and teacher self-efficacy conditions lead to improved learning outcomes. The study noted that national inclusive education policies tend to focus more on visible disabilities, often neglecting learning disabilities. This policy gap continues to marginalize many learners who require specialized instructional support. The study established that effective inclusion depends on reinforcing conditions including teacher competence, institutional support, and learner-centred pedagogy. It further demonstrated multiple pathways (equifinality) through which similar outcomes can be achieved. The study recommends strengthening teacher training in inclusive education, enhancing school climate through leadership and policy support, and institutionalizing Monitoring and Evaluation systems to track inclusion outcomes. Policymakers should adopt integrated approaches that combine pedagogical innovation with systemic reforms. There are two major contributions of the study; the development of the Emotional, Instructional and Structural Inclusion Grid and extension of the theoretical inclusion framework in UPE for improving inclusive policy designs and implementation, the monitoring and evaluation of inclusion in specific school contexts. This study contributes to understanding inclusion by explaining how interacting conditions influence learning outcomes for children with learning disabilities in Uganda. The study was self-funded and was Supervised by Professor Proscovia Ssentamu Namubiru and Dr. Edgar Kateshwumbwa Tumwesige at Uganda Management Institute.
